Mr. Garvan then began a history of the whole Hapgood case, but Mr. Little-ton objected and Recorder Goff sustained him. Mr. Garvan, however, extained him. Mr. Garvan, however, explained the bearing of the Ward letter and the importance of the denial of the "O. K." on it by Mann, and said: "Col. Mann knew if he admitted the "O. K.' he would be asked how he came into possession of stocks, handled by Count Ward.
"We will show you an agreement had been entered into, begiveen Col. Mann and Count Ward, by which the former was to boom Rico mining stocks, and we will show you that $10,000 worth of Rico mining stock came into postersion of Col. Mann."

Mr. Garvan, then called to the stand-Deputy Clerk Te M. Penny, of the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, who acted as clerk at the Hapgood trial. He proceeded to have Clerk Penny Identify the records and exhibits in the Hapgood case. As he proceeded Col. Mann, with his thumb thrust in the arm-hole of his white vest, leaned far back, as if weary, with his beard and big gray bar the pointing cellingward.

When at last the Mann case began the court-room was packed. Col. Mann patted his daughter's shoulder, leaned over and whispered a moment to his wife and resumed his place by his counsel.

Lawyer Littleton, for the defense, asked that the denial of his request for a dismissal of the case be entered as a part of the record. He promised to give the Recorder authorities for such action.
